Understanding the signs and symptoms of PTSD

PTSD is a mental health disorder that can develop after experiencing or witnessing a traumatic event. The symptoms can include:

- Flashbacks or intrusive memories of the traumatic event
- Repeated thoughts or images of the event
- Physical reactions to reminders of the event
- Avoidance of activities or situations that trigger memories of the event
- Numbness or detachment from others or activities

If you think you may have PTSD, it is important to seek help from a healthcare provider. Treatment options may include therapy, medication, or a combination of both.

The text on the page is written in Khmer. It appears to be a notice or announcement, possibly related to health information or community services.

The layout of the text is vertical, with multiple sections that seem to be listing names, addresses, phone numbers, and other details.

For a more accurate representation, the text would need to be transcribed into a readable format, which could then be translated into English. The content appears to be about healthcare providers, as indicated by the names and contact information.
